which would have revealed l'asquale as the murderer of Mrs. Asherman. When Detective George Gibson went to New Gretna to search l'asquale's ef-fects he found a slip of paper, among other papers, bearing the name of the child, Rose Asherman.

The police went to see the little girl and asked her did she remember Pasquale's name. She did not. Nor could she identify his picture.

Now in his latest confession. Pas-quale told Major Adams that he had given the child a wrist watch. The police have learned that it was one of his idiosyncrasies to give wrist watches to girls, even though he scarcely knew them. He confessed in great detail about having entered the house, killed the old woman and stolen $300.
